Instructor: Paul Martin
Course No. 066
Course Title: Critical Approaches to Lit
Semester: Spring 2009

Please evaluate the course. (You might consider class readings, discussions, lectures, and activities; the intellectual challenge of the course; changes in your work over the semester; the value of what you learned.)

The course is well suited as the lone English requirement. It provided a broad base of literary theory and how to approach literature in differing aspects.

Please evaluate the instructor. (You might consider the instructor's preparation for class; interactions with students in class; quality of the instruction; feedback on your work; and availability outside class.)

The instructor was very good. He is a strong speaker, funny and reasonable.

Please evaluate the work you put into this course. (You might consider the quality of your written work; your contributions to group and class discussions; and your commitment to the course.)

I put a medium to high level of work into this course relative to my other classes.

Very challenging but a good challenge to interpret what we read in the ways.

Please evaluate the instructor. (You might consider the instructor's preparation for class; interactions with students in class; quality of the instruction; feedback on your work; and availability outside class.)

Professor Martin was a great professor - very open & supportive - very interested about student experience & life at the university. Passionate about the course & great choice of literature.

Please evaluate the work you put into this course. (You might consider the quality of your written work; your contributions to group and class discussions; and your commitment to the course.)

I felt I contributed very well - I tried my best to understand theory & figure out the approach that best suited me. Tests were more challenging than papers but I was determined.

I was expecting to strongly dislike this course. I had heard that it was boring, slow and unimpressive and I was completely shocked at how much I enjoyed it. The novels were wonderful, tying to our critical approaches very well. The professor engaged this discussion appropriately.

Please evaluate the instructor. (You might consider the instructor's preparation for class; interactions with students in class; quality of the instruction; feedback on your work; and availability outside class.)

Very well informed, showed passion in the subject - allowed for student interpretation to flourish.

The informational readings (ex. readings about theory and literature) were well chosen. The novels, however, seemed too simple. The discussion questions were good.

Please evaluate the instructor. (You might consider the instructor's preparation for class; interactions with students in class; quality of the instruction; feedback on your work; and availability outside class.)

I feel that the course moved slowly. I did not like all the time spent on the theories & ~~essays~~ <sup>essays</sup>, because no matter what I would end up forgetting them. I feel that reading novels & then explaining the theories in relation to the novels would have worked better.

Paul was pretty good. He gave a good shot at trying to make the material interesting. Discussions in class were usually fun.

I did a decent amount of work. The word limit on papers was killing me though.

Primarily, this course did a good job emphasizing the fact that the author is not the dictator of a novel, and that intertextuality is key to the way a work is perceived.

The work that I put into this course, particularly my midterm exam & my final paper, was some of my best work this semester. My writing in this course had more depth than my writing in any other course this semester.

This course was more difficult than I anticipated. Although the material was presented well, more regular assignments would be helpful in staying "in the loop", so to speak. Despite this fact, in general it was a great course with interesting discussions. I did find myself pushing harder and growing as a student in the English department.

Since I took the class as a second semester senior, I lost much of the preparatory tools the class is meant to provide. Overall, I felt the books we read were interesting, but the critical articles became repetitive after a while.

Please evaluate the instructor. (You might consider the instructor's preparation for class; interactions with students in class; quality of the instruction; feedback on your work; and availability outside class.)

Martin was very personable and passionate about the content of the course. His biggest hinderance was the students who ardently refused to participate. Additionally, he repeated himself frequently because he couldn't remember what he had already told us (likely b/c he had so many sections of the class). Despite this, he was very knowledgeable and very pleasant.

Please evaluate the work you put into this course. (You might consider the quality of your written work; your contributions to group and class discussions; and your commitment to the course.)

I want as studios with the critical articles as I was with books and blog posts.

I found the first part of the course to be rather dense as it focused on literary theory. I ~~to~~ thought the novels we read in the second half of the course were fantastic and ~~if~~ they allowed us to put our analytical theory in to use. Lectures were very well conducted with ample opportunity for discussion. I learned invaluable skills in this course.

Paul was great. He ~~to~~ allowed the students to feel that the barrier between us was dissolved and I felt that we were equals in the classroom. His knowledge-ability and his approachability ~~were~~ ~~to~~ made me want to be in class and want to engage the material. Paul is an example of a teacher who believes he can learn as much from us as we can from him.
