Please evaluate the course. (You might consider class readings, discussions, lectures, and activities; the intellectual challenge of the course; changes in your work over the semester; the value of what you learned.)

Enjoyed the course, lectures were interesting, I'm not a huge fan of posting on the blog.

Please evaluate the instructor. (You might consider the instructor's preparation for class; interactions with students in class; quality of the instruction; feedback on your work; and availability outside class.)

Professor was always very prepared, accessible outside of class and understanding of a personal situation that caused me to have to miss class and get an extension on a paper.

Please evaluate the work you put into this course. (You might consider the quality of your written work; your contributions to group and class discussions; and your commitment to the course.)

I spent a lot of time reading weekly and writing essays a few days in advance.

I really enjoyed the style of the lectures, very open dialogue, Professor Martin is very welcoming to different opinions. Some of the books were a tad dry, more group interactions would be fun.

Professor Martin is extremely open-minded and likes interacting with his students, in and out of lecture.

I could've kept up with the readings more but a lot of it was missed I felt one to two days spent on a single book (esp. during finals) is not adequate.

I did readings, not always on time.
I wish that the first paper counted more percentage-wise because the last week of work (exam & final paper) is ~~1/2~~ 50% of the grade. I wish it were more spread out.

I think Paul is an excellent professor. He is extremely accessible, both in person + via e-mail + ^{brings real} ~~excitement~~ excitement + passion to the class. I particularly appreciate the preparation + cultural background he brought to class, which is particularly important in a class like this.

I think I put in a lot of work to this class, which was directly related to how much Paul brought to it. His enthusiasm propelled me to do more.

I enjoyed most of the course readings though the themes could have been a little more varied - I also felt that a book or two could have been excluded to allow more time for the longer and deeper novels. Overall course discussions were enjoyable.

Please evaluate the instructor. (You might consider the instructor's preparation for class; interactions with students in class; quality of the instruction; feedback on your work; and availability outside class.)

Paul Martin was very versed in the subject matter and provided insight into areas not mentioned in course material (histories, Canadian culture and geography). Also, he facilitated discussions well.

I looked at a lot of the readings as leisure to some extent, work load was light so I really put effort into the assignments.

This class was one of the most interesting and engaging ~~English~~ English classes I've taken. I enjoyed all the books we read and they taught me a lot about themes, ideas, and motifs commonly found in First Nations writing.

~~Some~~ Some of the novels challenged me, but class discussion helped a lot.

Paul really engages the class, it is all discussion based so it offers the class an opportunity to really discuss + explore the novel + their themes. Paul is really open and wants + encourages people to speak up and participate.

I put a lot of time into this class especially staying up with the 6 or 7 novels we had to read.

→ The course was ~~not~~ in hindsight well structured. We examined fiction of native writers (some good, some not so good), that consistently related back to common course themes laid out originally in our examination of Tom King's "The Truth About Stories". I enjoyed most of the classes.

I loved almost all of the books we read for this class, with the exception of Four Seasons, but even then understood & appreciated the value of the story's content & social commentary. Discussions were usually pretty stimulating (when everyone had read) and though I felt challenged by the course work, I did not find it exhaustingly demanding. I feel as though I have gained invaluable insights into the issues facing Native peoples, and find that I have come to change my perspective & reevaluate the ways in which I think and talk about these issues.
